Welcome back to a new year at Tulane! Earlier this month, we launched our newsletter. This digital newsletter and weekly bulletin will replace the monthly print newsletter. Newsletters will look further into the future. Finally, we have added announcements for more immediate events and deadlines.

In addition to our regularly scheduled events, the Office of Graduate and Postdoctoral Studies (OGPS) is looking for graduate student fellows for the 2022-23 school year. Each fellow will work on multiple projects that are a combination of identified needs of the OGPS and their personal interests. Each fellow will be supervised by a faculty member and will work on projects that may include administrative tasks, grant writing, and other scholarly activities.

The OGPS is also seeking postdoctoral fellow opportunities. The OGPS Fellows webpage includes a list of available fellowships and opportunities for postdoctoral scholars.

Please visit the OGPS website for more information on these opportunities.

Supportive mentoring is critical in ensuring a positive climate for graduate students and postdoctoral scholars. The OGPS offers a series of workshops and resources designed to help students and scholars develop effective mentoring relationships. These resources are available to all members of the OGPS community.

The OGPS is excited to announce the launch of a new series of workshops and events. These events are designed to provide support and guidance for graduate students and postdoctoral scholars throughout their academic careers.

The OGPS also offers a variety of resources and services to support graduate students and postdoctoral scholars. These resources include access to professional development opportunities, career exploration, and support for learning and research.

If you have any questions or concerns, please contact the OGPS at ogps@tulane.edu or visit the OGPS website for more information.

Thank you for your support of the OGPS and for your dedication to excellence in graduate and postdoctoral education.

Sincerely,
[Your Name]